The work tells the story of an outstanding woman born in 1964 with a Vietnamese mother and a French father, who did not allow himself to be overwhelmed by misfortune, rose to master life. Flipping each page, sometimes, readers don't believe what the author goes through is real. Everything is too much for a child. But it happened, lasting.

Isabelle Müller's five-month childhood was a series of horrific days with economic struggles, overworked labor, discrimination from the community, and the domestic family for being labeled "crossbreeds " when living in France. And worse, she was abused, abused, threatened by her violent father for years. Many times, little Isabelle, who was indignant, wanted to look to death for fear of the secret of the sky that divided her family and made Mrs. Bean Thi Cuc (Self Loan) - her mother had to be more miserable. From a young age, Isabelle understood the pain, the endurance her mother suffered was so great that she did not want to push her into the end of the grim. What she feared the most was losing her mother.

Learning the strength of his mother, the main character in the book always seeks to face, handle each difficulty, adversity with hope "Everything will be fine ". So, but where there was only sitting and hoping, when she needed it, she was strongly gone, starting a new path and returning to see her parents when her spirit and life were better. After so much next equally challenging challenges: both her husband and children had cancer. What makes readers unable to leave the book next to the writer's own life drama series are the memories she and her mother made on their journey from France back to Vietnam to meet relatives in the 90s. The more you learn about the source, the more Isabelle Müller is proud and thankful for her life for being the daughter of "Loan mother", a loving mother, next to her side to listen. Sometimes want to cry but can't cry. At a time of collapse and wondering why life made herself so tired, she still reassured herself by: "I will not give up before fate, but will fight!Challenge me, but at least be fair and give me the power to overcome!".
